

Applying for Social Security Benefits

Social Security manages two different programs for people with disabilities: Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) and Supplemental Security Income (SSI). You do not need to know which program you qualify for in order to apply. Social Security will make that determination. They will look for SSDI eligibility first. If you do not qualify for SSDI or your SSDI payment will be too small to meet a basic standard of living, Social Security will then look for SSI eligibility.

By law, Social Security has the following definition of disability:

- 1) You must have a disabling medical condition or conditions; and
- 2) You must be unable to do any substantial work because of your medical condition(s). For example, in 2020, substantial work means monthly earnings of more than $1,260 gross ($2,110 if blind); and
- 3) Your medical condition(s) must have lasted, or be expected to last, at least 1 year, or result in your death.

You cannot get disability benefits just because your doctor says you are disabled. If you are currently earning more than $1,260 ($2,110 if blind) gross a month, you may not be eligible for disability benefits regardless of your medical condition, age, education, or work experience.

How do I apply for benefits?

You can apply by calling Social Security's toll-free number, 1-800-772-1213. People who are deaf or hard of hearing may call the Social Security's toll-free "TTY" number, 1-800-325-0778, between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. Monday through Friday. The Social Security operator can make an interview appointment for your application to be taken over the telephone or at a local Social Security office. You can also apply on-line at www.socialsecurity.gov.

After you make an appointment, Social Security will send you release forms and an application. The release forms are necessary in order for your doctor(s) to give Social Security the information needed to determine that you are disabled. The application will help you prepare for your appointment with Social Security.

What does Social Security want to know about my medical condition?

- 1) Tell Social Security about all your health concerns. Sometimes one condition is enough to qualify for disability benefits, but sometimes it is the combination of several health concerns.
- 2) Find the names, addresses, phone numbers and fax number for all the doctors, clinics and hospitals from which you have had treatment and the dates that you received services. If you have any medical records, lab and test results, include them with your application.
- 3) List all the medications you are taking.
- 4) Be very honest about how much you are able to do and what kind of help you require to go through your day. Even if the help is unpaid or is provided by a family member, it is helpful to include that information on your application.

Who makes the decision about my disability?

In Minnesota, the State Disability Determination Services makes the disability decisions for Social Security. This state agency has doctors, medical professionals and vocational experts. They will contact your doctors and places you received treatment to get information about your medical condition(s). After Disability Determination Services receives your medical information, they may ask you to have an examination or medical test. If they ask you to have an examination or test, you will not have to pay for it. Responding immediately and keeping appointments will help speed up a decision on your claim.

It takes about 3 to 5 months to get a decision. This depends on how much time it takes to get your medical records and any other evidence needed to make a decision. The more information you can provide, the better your chance for a faster decision.

What if I am turned down?

About half of all disability benefit applications are turned down initially. If you are turned down, read the letter from Social Security carefully. The letter will tell you why you were turned down, the information on which they based this decision, and how to appeal the decision. Appealing the decision asks Social Security to look again at your situation and gives you the opportunity to give more information as to why you believe you meet Social Security's definition of disability or other eligibility rules. In the appeal you need to respond to the reasons why Social Security said you were not eligible. For an appeal:

- You should check that all your doctors, clinics and hospitals responded to the request for information. If one of your primary doctors isn't listed on the letter, it could be that the doctor didn't respond to the request for information and the Disability Determination Services needed to make a decision without that information.
- Make sure that all your medical condition(s) were considered.
- Check that the information on which Social Security made its decision was accurate and complete. For example, losing a job while Social Security was making a decision could change Social Security's decision depending upon the circumstances of your job loss.

You may choose to hire an attorney, or work with a social service professional or family member to appeal the decision. The Work Incentives Connection cannot help you with your application or appeal.

WHAT YOU NEED FOR YOUR DISABILITY INTERVIEW WITH SOCIAL SECURITY:

You should have as much of the following information as possible for your interview. Use this checklist provided by Social Security's website to keep track of the information you gather.

Be sure to keep your appointment. Do not delay filing even if you do not have all of this information. Social Security can help you get any missing information.

- An original or certified copy of your birth certificate. If you were born in another country, proof of U.S. Citizenship or legal residency.
- If you were in the military service, the original or a certified copy of your military discharge papers (Form DD214) for all periods of active duty.
- W-2 forms from last year or your federal tax return if you were self-employed (IRS 1040 and Schedules C and SE).
- Workers Compensation information, including: date of injury, claim number and payment amount.
- Social Security Numbers of your spouse and children.
- Checking or savings account number, if you have one.
- Name, address and phone number of a person who can get in touch with you if necessary.
- Medical and job information:
 - Names, addresses and phone numbers of all doctors, clinics, hospitals and other treatment professionals.

Medical and job information (continued)

- Your patient ID number at each of those providers.
- Dates seen by each provider
- Names of medicines you are taking
- Medical records, lab and test results that you have in your possession
- Kinds of jobs and the dates you worked for the 15 years before becoming disabled

If you might be eligible for Supplemental Security Income, you will also need:

- Information about the home where you live, such as your mortgage or your lease and landlord's name;
- Payroll slips
- Bank statements
- Insurance policies
- Car registration
- Burial fund records
- Other information about your income and the things you own.

The above checklist information came from the Social Security's website (SocialSecurity.gov)
